remain a monument to the architectural skill of the Adam brothers. After lunch, Fred took E and me down to the Soane Museum, whihh houses a most curious and interesting collection, including many of Soane's own drawings, and over 20,000 designs by Robert Adam, his father and brothers. The place is cluttered up with plaster casts, a few excellent paintings, a library of rare architectural books, marble sarcophagi, bronzes, and such a quantity of objets d'art as one could hardly believe a man could have collected in a single lifetime. It was a most interesting afternoon.

Arthur Schlesinger had left yesterday, and Jane McBaine today, after a two-week stay.

Sam Reber came for drinks with us tonight. He is on his way to Africa to make a survey for several foundations who are exploring the possibility of establishing a Northern African leadership training center, or to determine what other forms of adult training centers might be desirable or practical in the area.

Carl Johnson, Vice President of Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co., David Kennedy, Chairman, and Donald Graham, Vice Chairman of the bank, came to see me this morning. They have lately established their only foreign branch. It is located in London. We talked of such matters as the improbable rise of the present price of gold, a devaluation of sterling, and various central banking matters. I lunched at Bucks.
